Enquiry 4 - How far was the failure of the policy of appeasement the main cause of the outbreak of WWII?

The Treaty of Versailles (U BRAT)

The German people were extremely unhappy about the treaty that was signed at the end of WWI by their politicians, nicknamed the 'November Criminals'. Germany could not afford to pay the money requested by the treaty and were humiliated by its military [army] and territorial [land] terms; Germany had been a militaristic and imperialistic society before WWI. The key terms were:

- Unfair – that Germany was not allowed to attend. It was seen as a 'diktat', a dictated peace.
- Blame – for WW1 under Article 231, the War Guilt Clause
- Reparations – £6.6 billion / 132 million gold marks, which arguably led to hyperinflation
- Army – reduced to 100,000 men; only allowed 6 battleships, no tanks or aircraft.
- Territory – industrial regions such as The Saar (coalfields) placed under French protection, the Rhineland was demilitarised and Danzig was declared a Free City, They were not allowed to unite with Austria. In total they lost 13 % of their land [below].

Failure of the League of Nations

The League of Nations was a group of countries set up to help keep world peace. This was a group designed to settle problems through discussion rather than violence. These were the main reasons why the League was a failure:

1. Absence of the USA - Not all countries joined; sanctions therefore ineffective
2. Ineffective Sanctions - The League had no real power because they could not effectively enforce economic or military sanctions without the USA. Countries would just continue to trade with USA. The League had no army so had to rely on member's armies, who were reluctant to start a war
3. British & French Self-Interests – both often acted in their own self interest by doing what was best for them, not those who needed help.
4. Long Response Times - The League was unable to act quickly as it took a long time to discuss things. It was a year before they issued a statement declaring objections to the invasion of Manchuria.

Hitler's aggressive foreign policy aims and actions [outlined in Mein Kampf]

1. Abolish the Treaty of Versailles
2. Expand German territory – this policy was known as Lebensraum (living space).
3. Defeat Communism – Hitler hated communism and hoped to expand the German Empire by taking land from the USSR.

Hitler became Chancellor in 1933 and he almost immediately began secretly rearming. Although forbidden to do so by the Treaty of Versailles, Hitler ordered his troops into the Rhineland in 1936.

His next steps were to take back the lands that had been taken away after World War One which included parts of Czechoslovakia and the Sudetenland. The final straw was when Hitler invaded Poland in 1939. This caused Britain and France to declare war on Germany.

Failure of Appeasement

Appeasement was designed to allow Hitler to do some things in order to prevent a world war. Although Britain and France could have stopped Hitler at many points they did not want to risk war against him. The general public wanted to avoid a war at all costs. Tactically, appeasement would also buy time for Britain to build up its army. The most famous example of Appeasement was the Munich Agreement which stated that Germany would make no further attempts at gaining land, if they were allowed the Sudetenland. However, Hitler invaded the rest of Czechoslovakia in 1939.

The Nazi-Soviet Pact

In 1939 Hitler offers Stalin a deal, Hitler agrees that he will not go to war with Russia and that the two countries would split Poland in half and take half each. Stalin did not trust Hitler but he also did not trust Britain and France, who had left him isolated by refusing to take his concerns, about Hitler or an alliance with the USSR, seriously. Stalin decided to accept to Nazi-Soviet pact. Many argue this was one of the main causes of war as it ruined chances of a British-Soviet pact, demonstrated Hitler was intent on war and demonstrated to the British public that Hitler could not be trusted.
